The Power of Community

Based on the True Tale of the
Karma Coin Bees

In a bright, blooming meadow stood a golden place called Karma Hyve, warm as the sunrise and busy with happy bees.

The bees gathered nectar together, stored it in the honeycomb, and shared the work to the rhythm of their buzzing songs.

But while Karma Hyve thrived, other hives were in need because bearish bees were giving honey to outsiders to look big and popular.

Some tired bees visited the golden hyve.
“Do you give free honey?” they asked.
“No,” said Karma Hyve,
“but you’re welcome to join the work.”

“Bring nectar, help decide, and build with us.
Workers are rewarded for their effort; outsiders don't get free honey.”

Working together,
the Karma Hyve
grew stronger.
Bees from hungry
hives joined in,
and flowers began
to bloom everywhere.

And so the golden hyve stayed safe and fair: there is always honey for everyone's needs—never for everyone's greed.
